“Tim's passing has been a time for sharing of memories. I know Ruth, his sister, has posted pics. I have not seen some of them since I was a child. Death has a way of drawing people closer. When I see them, so much about my early years comes back to me along with memories of my big brother. He was my "big brother" through the years at Oakville and even when I would visit him in N.J. End of a part of my life.

“My uncle Tim had a knack for making everyone around him laugh and I will always remember him as being larger than life. He will be missed by many and will forever live in our memories.

“ As the eldest child in the family, Timmy always seemed to me, as well to be closer to the adult world than that of the kids. He tinkered with cars, smoked and preferred to watch American Band Stand to the Three Stooges on TV. He wore white T-shirts and had a rat tailed comb in his back pocket. Timmy had a poster of Elvis above his bed and I always thought it was him! So good looking!

He paid me sometimes to cook him breakfast when I could barely reach the stove and he happily ate a mess of burnt eggs and bacon. He taught me to siphon water so that I could clean the turtle cage he made for me and many other things.

I cried when he went off to Toronto to study “metallurgy “ at Ryerson. A daring move in those days. It seemed our family was no longer intact but I soon felt better when he hitchhiked home every weekend, laundry in tow.

Many memories.

“ Tim was my older brother and when I was young, he seemed more like another adult to me than another kid. He always had a job, first as a paperboy, and his own money, which was enough on its own to put him in a much more grown up category than us. When he was an adult he was very interested in staying close to his family even though he was living in a different country, The physical distance made that harder but there was never any emotional distance. We had many long telephone discussions covering everything from politics to grandchildren, Those who knew Tim will also know that he was not without an opinion on any topic we discussed. He will be missed.

“ In all the difficult challenges that Tim faced in his last years, we forget the good things about him. He was opinionated, but very knowledgeable; stubborn but steadfast; rooted in his later years, but curious about the world around him; fretful but faithful, and most of all, undyingly loving and loyal to his family. We had so many long conversations over the years he was in NJ, developing intimacy over the things that mattered to him - his kids and grandkids - and recognizing kindred spirit in the political realm. And we had a lot of laughs.

I'm so sorry for Tim's difficult end, and will miss his wit and humour.

“ I am so very sorry for your loss, Tim and my husband John Edgar (deceased Jan.2005) were more like brothers than cousins, when it came to trouble if the one didn't think of it the other did. When Tim moved away they lost touch but there were a lot of memories for John. He had the best Mom and Dad ever, we loved them dearly. I am so sorry for the loss of your son to diabetes, it is a horrific disease, I live with it daily. God bless you all. Much Love Barb Edgar
